Introduction
This bibliography originated with the establishment of the Royal Commission on the Future of Health Care in Canada, 2002. It began by asking, “How many Royal Commissions have there been in Canada regarding health since the first such commission was formed? It soon became necessary to expand this idea to include both Commissions of Inquiry and Public Inquiries, as these are commissioned in the same fashion, under the relevant public inquiries acts. Task Forces were then added as they are an intermediary type of study between a Royal Commission and a working group or advisory committee. Also included in this bibliography are special committees and a select few other types of studies, usually those which have arisen from a target study or which were follow-up to existing studies.

Task forces and similarly-named groups, such as “task groups” and “working groups”, the most difficult type to define, comprise the majority of the citations in this bibliography. Ultimately, all task forces have been considered, as have most task groups and any other groups designated with the term “task” somewhere in their title, whereas working committees and other permutations of this term have been excluded from consideration. These task forces may be formed under a single department, or they may be multi-departmental and / or include non-governmental bodies.

Ideally, each of these types of inquiry is organized for a specific purpose, and is mandated to produce a report or reports. Once these reports are issued, the group is usually disbanded, but occasionally they are retained for another study. One example of a committee with multiple reports is the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. This Committee, chaired by Senator Michael Kirby, produced one report on the health of Canadians and another on mental health, both of which are included here.

Often, studies are referred to by the chief author, usually the chairperson(s) or task force leader. Most of these reports have been examined to determine who this person was, but some chairs were not designated in the available Orders-in-Council, letters of transmission, lists of personnel, or appendices. Our experience with Saskatchewan Commissions has shown that some Orders specified that the Chair was to be determined by the Commissioners themselves, and occasionally these designations have appeared elsewhere, such as in an executive summary or note of appreciation. However, there are still some studies for which no chair could be identified.
Selection Criteria
The concept “Health Care” is difficult to define due to conflicting parameters, illustrated by the following two scenarios: a study on accessibility to transportation for the frail elderly has been excluded as it focuses more on social services than health, although this might be debatable; conversely, although occupational health and safety studies for the most part are excluded, a submission to the Task Force on Electronic Commerce regarding Bill C-54 and the implication for privacy of medical information has been included as it deals specifically with health information privacy. Trade-offs were necessary when selecting entries, thus inconsistencies may be found.

A further difficulty arose in trying to determine the relevance of certain studies that may be excluded by one criterion, but included by another. Examples include: inter-relations among rehabilitation (including occupational and physical therapy, acupuncture and chiropody), occupational health and safety, workers’ compensation and accident/handicaps prevention. As the user will note, there are still plenty of studies included—more than 250—some with multiple reports.

Generally, included here are the interim, final, and summary reports; executive summaries, synopses and progress reports (except annual reports); and some discussion papers and background studies, as these have been located. Submissions to federal and provincial Royal Commissions have generally been excluded from consideration in this bibliography, due to the vast numbers of these submissions. Also, the health-related parts of some Royal Commissions, such as that on Aboriginal Peoples, have been included.

An attempt has been made to group all related reports when a main report and its antecedent(s) could be identified. Only public reports are listed here. For the most part, reports from most task forces have been considered for this list, including: department- and minister-initiated; joint-jurisdictional; multi-regional or multi-district; mixed origin, including hybrid governmental and non-governmental; and, strictly non-governmental groups, such as those undertaken by associations.

For Saskatchewan, all studies related to the so-called “Thrust Committee” of the Department of Health have been included. Only some of these studies were designated as Task Forces.
What is included?
The following categories of studies have been included in this bibliography:

- consultation and discussion papers, policy papers, and feedback documents to larger studies (selected);
- coroners inquiries (focus on medical aspects only; excluded is Ontario’s forensic pathologist Charles Smith criminal inquiry);
- drugs and substance abuse generally;
- early childhood development (Health Canada funds Aboriginal Head Start program, for example);
- food safety issues;
- health care facilities, including specific hospitals;
- health insurance;
- medical and health-care ethics;
- medical costs of particular health problems, such as drunk driving;
- medical personnel studies, including pay and benefits, labour relations, education and training, staffing;
- medical specialities, such as cytology and radiation treatment, and branches of medicine, such as dentistry and surgery, and alternative medicine;
- mental health studies;
- rehabilitation, including occupational and physical therapy and chiropractic;
- specific illnesses and populations, such as northern areas.

What is excluded?
Excluded from this bibliography are the following categories of study and document types:

- annual reports;
- automobile insurance, but medical effects of traffic accidents are included;
- conference proceeding and workshop reports;
- directories of programs and services in specific areas or for specific populations;
- draft legislation, but committee interim and final reports on such matters are included;
- human rights;
- individual submissions before Royal Commissions, except for individual studies submitted within the context of a non-health-related larger study, and here, only as these could be identified;
- mortality and other vital statistics compilations and studies;
- municipal, narrowly-focused regional studies, but northern and inter-provincial studies are included;
- occupational health and safety;
- social welfare studies, such as child/ wife abuse, but sexual abuse of patients, including the elderly in institutional care, and of health care workers is included;
- specific industries, such as the grain industry, and mining;
- strictly-technical environmental health studies which exclude a health policy component, such as lead levels in the blood of persons living near smelters or other factories producing such contaminants (two studies in New Brunswick on cancer and the environment, and human reproduction and environmental chemicals, are included);
- water studies;
- worker’s compensation.
Organization
Concerning commissions and task forces on general health themes, all documents emanating from the same study are grouped together in one place. Also, various updates or other relevant studies from succeeding organizations or other bodies are listed with their antecedents. Thus, a preliminary study, the final report, the executive summary, if available, and any reactions to these recommendations are listed together.

Concerning general commissions and task forces subdivided into more specific themes, the reports have been broken up to be filed under a subject heading. Quebec's Royal Commission from the 1960s has been kept together, since the individual final reports are available in the Library in English, but all the “Annexes”, save two, are available here only in French.

Sections are organized alphabetically as follows:
- Federal Canadian studies, including joint federal-provincial-territorial studies;
- Provincial studies, by province, and then by commission or task force name;
- Other studies.

The only exception to the above arrangement will be found in Section C7, on specific hospitals, where all seven Quebec hospital studies have been alphabetized by underlined hospital name, ignoring the general form of inquiry name. This was done largely to allow faster use of this section and also to place adjacent to each other two studies that appear to be nearly identical, although this possibility could not be confirmed.

Citations are organized in the following order:
- Name of corporate body or author name(s). In certain instances, “F/P/T” has been substituted for “Federal/Provincial/Territorial” to avoid repeating this lengthy phrase.
- Title of document, especially for final report, if any, which is always listed first.
- Name of Chair or Co-Chairs, if any could be determined. Deputy/Vice Chairs have not been tracked.
- Significant series numbers (organizational internal document numbers are omitted).
- Place, publisher, month and year of publication; occasionally, exact date from title page.
- Access details, in this order: Paper copy, if Legislative Library has it; Microfiche copy, and whether Legislative Library has it or not (The Microlog Index was named ProFile Index in the 1970s. Often, more than one report was placed on the same set of microfiche, and occasionally, reports from different departments were placed together. For this reason, some numbers may appear more than once); Internet address, plus the date of access to confirm availability. In all possible cases, purls (permanent URLs) via either Library and Archives Canada’s (LAC) Electronic Collection, Government of Canada Publications, or via various Legislative Libraries’ electronic repositories, have been preferred, otherwise, the sponsoring agency’s address has been used.
- Other titles associated with the main entry: interim report, background studies, if any, government’s response.
- Notes at any of the above stages may indicate access or publication peculiarities.

SEE or SEE ALSO references, if any, have been entered at the appropriate points to lead the user to other possibly related studies. Related to this is the abbreviation “b”, in lowercase that indicates a bullet, below that main entry; thus, “A25b4” indicates the 4th bullet entry for the entry A25.
